Learning to ask wh- questions requires two things of students: they must learn the correct words to use, and they must learn the word order for two different types of wh- questions. As students learn to apply these features of wh- questions, they get parts right and parts not-quite-right and parts wrong as natural stages along the way to fluent and accurate question asking.

¹ polarity —some words occur only in negative or only in positive environments. Some is positively-oriented, occurring in neutral environments. Any is negatively-oriented, occurring in negative environments (negative verbs). One way to test a clause for polarity is by adding a tag question, for example, You have some money, don't you? (The main clause is positive; the tag question is negative.)

As I said in the addendum to my last post, maybe I'm not so ready to abandon the technical definition of grammar. In a recent post on Copyediting, Andrea Altenburg criticized the word funner in an ad for Chuck E. Cheese as "improper grammar", and my first reaction was "That's not grammar!". That's not entirely accurate, of course, as Matt Gordon pointed out to me on Twitter.
