Recently, I wrote about the quandary of grouping. Small group instruction supports greater student engagement, higher amounts of interaction, greater opportunity for teacher observation, and more student learning. However, the benefits of small group are balanced by the relative ineffectiveness of most seatwork activities. Subtracting the downside of working on one's own away

Breaking down exam skills with 'source windows' Inference can be a tough skill to teach, particularly at KS3. The nuance and context that surrounds a source can be incredibly complex, but, like any other skill, improving a students' inference can be achieved by the consistent repetition of good practice (easily said, I know).

When I first started investigating marking and feedback, I never thought it would change my practice the way it has. During my PGCE and NQT years, I used to mark books, write a 'what went well' comment and an 'even better if' comment, then expect my students to read it, set themselves a target and act on that target at a later point.
